WINTER 1998
Vol. 13, No. 1

Dear Friend of Ag in the Classroom,

Last summer I had the privilege of visiting a developing country. Being there forced me to reflect on the enormous wealth that we enjoy every day in these United States. From the food we eat and the clothes we wear to the opportunity for education, we are a blessed nation. What you do on the front lines for Ag in the Classroom contributes to that blessing. I caught a glimpse of how dedicated the Ag in the Classroom (AITC) ambassadors are when I met with the Consortium members and planning committee to organize the upcoming annual conference.

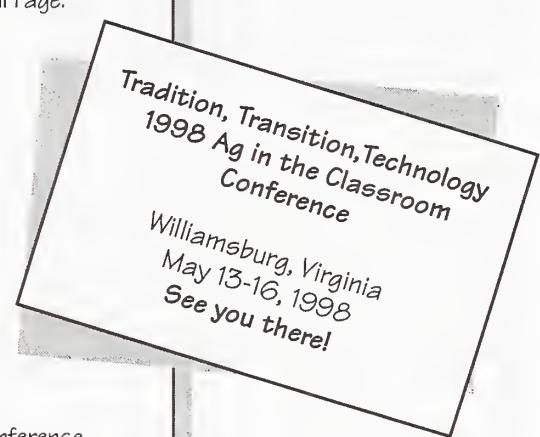

Since I began on January 5, as the new Ag in the Classroom National Program Leader, I have been impressed with the AITC community and its commitment to this worthy cause. I see my role as the new national leader as a partner with you. I am an educator. The following highlights some of my history.

- Taught elementary school for five years. Managed the Census Bureau's Education Program, designed to introduce educators to resources available and applicable to the fulfillment of educational goals.
- Expanded the use and promotion of Census Bureau statistics with national education associations, publishers, and curriculum developers, such as: The National Council of Teachers of Mathematics, DC Heath, Scholastic Magazine, and Mini Page.

- Sponsored partnerships outside the Census Bureau with National Geographic Society's State Geographic Alliances and the Presidential Award Winners in Mathematics and Science.
- Established proprietary tutoring business in mathematics for adults and children.
- Managed hotel contracts, conference space, and material dissemination for over 30 local and national conferences and annual meetings across the country.
- Authored and co-authored various teaching publications and training manuals.
- Facilitated office programs throughout the country within the Census Bureau's State Data Center Program and with the Bureau's Regional Offices.
- Worked with Computer Specialists to design an Internet based contact data base system.

Agriculture in the Classroom Consortium

Mr. Mark Linder, President AITC Consortium

The need to increase the awareness of agriculture grows every day as our population becomes further removed from the land. Most children in our schools today have never been on a farm or ranch and do not know the vital role agriculture plays in their daily lives. Agriculture in the Classroom (AITC) programs across the country continue to play a major role in building bridges between agriculture and education. The Agriculture in the Classroom Consortium was approved by state AITC representatives on July 15, 1997. Its purpose is to promote state and national Agriculture in the Classroom program efforts to help children, youth, teachers and other adults acquire a better understanding of agriculture. Consortium executive committee members, representing every region of the United States, were elected by their peers during the first meeting of the Consortium in July. Please contact your regional representatives and/or state AITC contact if you have questions relating to the Consortium.

National AITC Conference

The leadership of the Agriculture in the Classroom Consortium invites everyone who believes it is important to expand the understanding of agriculture's vital role in our society to pack your suitcase and join us May 13-16 in the historic

During the interview process, I presented a nine-page marketing plan of what I thought I could offer the program. My goals on the fore-front are as follows.

- Assist each state program.
- Identify and target present and potential customers.
- Establish a presence for agriculture within a variety of national teacher associations.
- Find teacher-friendly materials within the US Department of Agriculture and take them, along with the concepts of agricultural literacy, to educators, curriculum developers, and the educational media
- Enhance the Ag in the Classroom website.
- Electronically link the state representatives to strengthen open communication and sharing of ideas.

town of Williamsburg, Virginia. The National Agriculture in the Classroom Conference offers a unique opportunity to interact with AITC program volunteers, teachers, farmers, and representatives from universities, government agencies, commodity and agricultural organizations and youth development programs. It will be time well spent and I encourage you to make the effort to participate in this important conference. The executive board of the Consortium is working with Michele Award, Virginia Farm Bureau's AITC coordinator and Dorothy Jackson to identify speakers and plan workshops, roundtables, exhibits, general sessions and field trips that will stimulate your mind and expand your knowledge of effective methods to integrate the study of agriculture in our schools.

Welcome Dorothy Jackson!

On behalf of my Agriculture in the Classroom colleagues throughout the United States, we welcome Dorothy Jackson as national leader for USDA's Agriculture in the Classroom program. Dorothy's enthusiasm for her new job is quite apparent when you visit with her in person or over the telephone. Her experience with various state and national educational organizations will help extend Agriculture in the Classroom's awareness to many more teachers, school administrators and other business leaders involved in education. Dorothy is busy organizing USDA's Ag in the Classroom Conference; however, I know she would be glad to receive your friendly note or call.

I am excited about working with you, learning about your state programs, and promoting your accomplishments. Please don't hesitate to call me on 202-720-7925 or write to me at djackson@reeusda.gov. I look forward to meeting you at the annual conference in May 13-16, 1998 in Williamsburg, VA.

As our passion for agriculture is brought to educators and students all over this country, a generation will be charged to carry our vision. Your contributions to Ag in the Classroom will be felt for years to come.

Sincerely,

Dorothy Jackson
